If you are like me, you most likely use Photoshop to edit and manipulate images. Luckily, Photoshop for the web can be a lot like the desktop version of Photoshop and can be used to edit images without worrying about compatibility or disadvantages. In my opinion, the best parts of Photoshop for the web are the adjustable zoom level or “zoom percentage” and the auto adjust quality in regards to the size of the image. Unlike the desktop version of Photoshop, the web version doesn’t have too many tools that are not available in the desktop version. For example, you can’t create, draw, or pixelate. The Creativity Cloud tools are very similar to the desktop version of Photoshop and if you are looking to create or manipulate images, you will probably be quite happy with the web version. Creating a project in the desktop version will have you creating similar projects in the browser. Photoshop Camera is still fairly new and you can expect to see a lot more features and updates in the future. One of the biggest upsides of Photoshop for the Web is that you now have access to all of your desktop files and images on the web. Adobe has a lot of future updates to bring to the web version which might even make it closer to the desktop version of Photoshop. Who knows what we will see in the future, but for now the web version of Photoshop is a great way to edit all the images on the web remotely. It’s also fairly easy to use with no technical knowledge required, making it a perfect entry point for beginners. 933d7f57e6
