Textpad 8 0 Keygen 154 instmank..Q: Array elements return empty string I have an array which is not empty and holds some elements var i_hello_title = new String('hello'); var i_hello_option = new String('Option one'); var i_hello = new Array(i_hello_title, i_hello_option); Now if I loop through it or with alert(i_hello[0]) or alert(i_hello[1]); then I get alert: empty string. If I put alert(i_hello_title) or alert(i_hello_option); then they work as expected. Why does it not return some of the elements? A: The value type of Array is always String, so to assign new values to the elements of the Array, you need to convert them. var i_hello = new Array(new String('hello'), new String('Option one')); But that will only have to do the conversion in memory. If you want it to do it for you on the fly, you need to explicitly add the value as a string: var i_hello = new Array('hello','Option one'); Note that this is not a Array, it's an array-like object (it has a length property), and is not iterable. You cannot use var as you are using it to declare a variable, and with var as you can declare variables with a name that shadows an existing variable. In an interview this month, Peter Mueller, vice president of IT at Arbonne International, said he chose to be a consultant with the retailer after 25 years with Coke and Pepsi because he was looking for something more challenging. But while the company's employees seem to have embraced the move, customers were ambivalent. "I'm not sure [customers] even know there is a switch,
